Speed and strategy: turning old-school business on its head

There's a big difference between being an entrepreneur, and being a business owner. Between designing a product, and creating an innovative solution. It's all about pushing boundaries, going where nobody's gone before, and doing something genuinely new. And when you win at it, you change the world. Serial entrepreneurs will tell you – there's nothing like it.

Entrepreneurship can seem like a massive challenge, but Monarch Institute's Diploma of Entrepreneurship and Innovation will help you get there. It's been developed by entrepreneurs and executives who've already been there.

You'll finish your course with a ton of new knowledge and practical skills you're guaranteed to use in your new venture. But the best part is, the Diploma is so flexible, you can learn while you're laying the groundwork. This also makes it a great option for leaders and managers who want to innovate and grow within their existing organisations. Step up on your own, or bring the innovation X-factor to your management career – it's up to you.

Entrepreneurship and innovation insights

Australia has always been a country of people who aren't afraid to have a go. To try something new and do things their own way. Especially when it comes to business. Our designers, inventors, programmers and makers are taking over the start-up world.

In fact, there's a strong chance you're already familiar with a few home-grown heroes. You've probably heard of (or used) Canva, Afterpay, The Iconic, Koala, Linktree, me&yu or MrYum. The number of success stories and 'unicorns' is only ramping up. The thing they've all got in common? They were started by tiny teams, and succeeded on the strength of their genuinely unique solutions. The best time to start your journey to joining them is yesterday. The second best time is now.
